For centuries, Henry VIII's second wife Anne Boleyn has been portrayed as a cunning and manipulative woman, responsible for causing the bloody aspects of the Reformation in England. In truth, Anne was a highly educated and profoundly religious person who cared deeply about her moral standing. There is also evidence that Anne really did love Henry, even though he turned against her when she failed to provide the son he craved. In this portrayal of Anne she will appear in her execution gown during the last 45 minutes of her life in the Tower of London. Bear witness as she prepares to leave Henry, and to join the King of Kings.
