Saint Willibrord (658-739) was born in Yorkshire and educated under Bishop Wilfrid. After spending twelve years in Ireland as a monk and priest, he set out in 690 with eleven companions to bring Christianity to Frisia, in what is now the Netherlands and Germany. Supported by Pope Sergius I, who made him Archbishop of the Frisians in 695, Willibrord became known as the "Apostle of Frisia". He established his cathedral at Utrecht and founded a monastery at Echternach in Luxembourg.
Despite opposition from the pagan King Radbod and periods of exile, he continued preaching across northern Europe. After Radbod's death, Christianity spread more widely, helped by Boniface.
Remembered for his courage, perseverance and faith, Willibrord played a major role in establishing Christianity in Frisia and remains one of the great missionary saints of the early Church.
