

Ancaster Churchyard Memorials [PART 2]

Ancaster Churchyard Memorials [PART 1] lists, in summary the names of individuals recorded on gravestones, together with their date of burial.

A numerical reference indicates the position of each gravestone as marked on an accompanying churchyard plan.

Ancaster Churchyard Memorials [PART 2] provides the detail (although epitaphs have, for the most part been left unrecorded here).

Ancaster has a wealth of memorials dating from the eighteenth century (and one from the seventeenth century) which can rightly be considered of value as works of art. Their interest and value increases if it can be established who is buried beneath each stone.

Many of the earlier gravestones have been considered unreadable but careful cleaning has, in almost all cases, revealed the name or names, together with other information written on the stones.

Inevitably parts of an inscription remain indecipherable but identification of the grave occupant(s) has still been possible with the use of supporting information contained within Ancaster parish registers, mostly burial records (although these do not survive from before 1723). Note: this information is given (in italics) below each recorded inscription, if required.

The following records also note if any gravestone also carries the name of a stonemason who produced the memorial. Locally, three (perhaps four) generations of the Tyler family were stonemasons in Ancaster, the last of them, William Tyler being succeeded there by John Cragg. William Walton was a monumental mason in Sudbrook.

Note For most memorials the inscriptions begins with :- In Memory of, or Sacred to the Memory of.

Some of the earliest memorials may be instead inscribed with an introductory:- Here Lieth the body of, or Beneath Here Lieth .., perhaps with Beneath abbreviated to Bth.

Gravestones not in situ are recorded as NIS.
