

Story of the Wise Men Part 5

The bubble car transporting the wise men stopped at Tattershall Castle where they stayed the night.

The next day the journey continued to Southwell Minster where they came across the colossus computer which was knitted. The wise men thought this would give better answers to their questions as they were also knitted. So they asked Colossus about how they could spread the news of the baby Jesus.

The colossus computer did some calculations and suggested the use of Television. It suggested that it should head to North Lincolnshire to find out more.

Continuing on the journey they came across Papplewick pumping station. The wise men wanted to find out more as in their country it was very dry and needed to find solutions to provide more water to their people.

So they took the diversion and decided to visit. This was not a problem as the grumbling camels were not with them.

From this visit the wise men learned how stream power could be used to pump water from under the ground and into reservoirs which could then supply their people with constant water. The many volunteers explained many complicated things and offered to provide help with their project if needed.

This extra visit, even though very useful, meant that things were delayed and they had to get on their way and stop over night for a rest before continuing to North Lincolnshire.
