Provision [Exodus 15: 16:]

Moses led the Israelites on through the Desert of Sin, between Elim and Sinai, but it didn't take long for them to start moaning against Moses and looking back to their life in Egypt. The Lord promised to provide food for them. Each morning, they would receive "Bread from Heaven". A dew would settle on the land and flakes like frost would appear. They would harvest these flakes from the ground, sufficient for each day except for the sixth day when they would collect enough for two days. How much or how little they collected there would always be just enough for the day. They called this Manna and it tasted like wafers made with honey. In the evening the camp was filled with quails which provided meat to eat. These provisions were made by the Lord for forty years

As they journeyed, they came to Rephidim and set up camp. However, there was no water supply there and the people again started grumbling that they had been brought out of Egypt to die in the desert. The LORD told Moses to strike the rock at Horeb. He did so and water came out of the rock. On a later occasion [Numbers 20: 1-13] Moses repeated these actions but did not give the glory to the LORD. This action forced the Israelites into a longer period in the desert and Moses and Aaron were denied the prospect of entering the Promised Land.

Amalekites

The Amalekites were a semi-nomadic tribe which inhabited the Negev and Sinai Peninsula. They were descended from Esau, the brother of Jacob, and were a recurrent enemy of the Israelites. Whilst the Israelites were camped at Rephidim, they were attacked by the Amalekites. Moses ordered Joshua to lead the Israelites into battle whilst Moses watched from a nearby hill. When Moses held up his staff, the Israelites prevailed but as he grew tired, his arms drooped and the Amalekites prevailed. Aaron and Hur held up Moses' arms until sunset and the Amalekites were defeated
